

Special Containment Procedures:

SCP-173 is to be kept in a standard containment chamber constructed with reinforced concrete and sealed by a heavy blast door. Windows are to be installed five (5) meters above the floor of its containment chamber adjoined by an observation room with steel shutters in order to maintain eye contact with SCP-173 before and during testing.

Description:

SCP-173 is a concrete statue of unknown origin measuring 2.0 meters tall and weighing approximately 468 kg. The statue is vaguely humanoid in shape, although improperly proportioned. Traces of Krylon brand spray paint on the statue's upper body, resembling a face. Chemical analysis of the concrete shows no discernable abnormalities.

When the statue is left unobserved and line of sight is broken by a conscious being, the statue becomes animate, moving at speeds documented between 60 and 90 km/h. As blinking breaks visual contact, personnel assigned to enter its containment chamber are instructed to alert one another before blinking.

SCP-173 displays awareness of its environment, reacting to changes and responding to stimuli when it is free to move. It is unknown if SCP-173 is intelligent or sapient. However, the statue is extremely hostile and will attempt to kill any human that enters its containment chamber if left unobserved. It has been observed to attack non-humans and animate objects. The most common methods of attack are by snapping the neck at the base of the skull, or by strangulation. Alternative methods have been observed. SCP-173 doesn't seem to target unconscious or incapacitated individuals, but the reasons for this are unknown at this time.
